

I know that people tend to accept a lot of dishonesty these days. It almost seems as if we reward people who will do anything to win. We call it effective campaigning or shrewd politics when one candidate distorts another's or his own record. We call it effective marketing when an advertiser is able to mislead people about their product. We tend to think that this is just how the world works and there is nothing we can do. I think that this is a lie. We can have honesty in broadcasting and not only is possible, but it can be profitable as well. I expect the FCC to stand up for fairness and integrity with regard to Sinclair's airing of Stolen Honor. Equal time should be given to a pro-Kerry documentary or at least a fair and unbiased look at both candidates
